

Brick thrown at window results in baby hit by flying glass

June 21, 2022

A baby has been hit by flying glass after a brick was thrown at a train on approach into Hull Paragon station yesterday.

15 week old Esme Emmerson was travelling home from a day out in Beverley with her father and mother, Jason and Kristina, on the 15:00 Northern service from Bridlington to Hull when the incident happened close to Snuff Mill Lane at 15:45.

Given the proximity to Hull Paragon, the service was able to make it safely into the station where the incident was reported and the train involved taken out of service for repair.

Northern and British Transport Police have now issued an appeal for information.

Tony Baxter, regional director for Northern, said: "This was a totally reckless act by mindless individuals who gave no thought for other people's safety.

"The consequences of a brick hitting a fast-moving train are potentially devastating and we can only give thanks that Esme wasn't more seriously injured.

"Someone must know who threw that brick and I urge anyone with information about the events that led to Esme being hurt to contact British Transport Police."

Jason Emmerson and Kristina Vojsovicova, Esme's father and mother said: "It all happened so quickly. We were almost arriving into Hull when the brick hit the window and the smashed glass fell into Esme's pram. We were in shock. I'm just so grateful that Esme wasn't seriously hurt. I want whoever did this to know the impact of their actions. They need to hand themselves in to the police.

"It's a reminder to all parents to make sure to keep your kids safe as anything can happen while travelling with people doing this crazy stuff. That brick could have hit Esme or one of us – but thank god our baby is safe."

Chief inspector Graham Bridges said: "This was a very serious incident that could have had devastating consequences. Passengers, including a tiny baby, could have been seriously injured by the actions of whoever threw this object.

"Throwing bricks and stones at trains is an incredibly dangerous and reckless thing to do. We are working hard to identify those responsible."
