HS2 has said it is “bitterly disappointed” after charges against climate change protesters who occupied tunnels near Euston Station were dropped.

The article in the Evening Standard said four people faced charges of obstructing or disrupting a person engaged in a lawful activity, which they denied, after digging tunnels underneath Euston Square in north London and living inside them for a month.

The trial was due to run until Friday but the case was dropped on Wednesday, the Guardian newspaper reported.

The Guardian reported that the case was dropped because HS2 was not carrying out construction work on the site when the charges were made against the protestors.

The Prime Minister Boris Johnson says Northern Powerhouse Rail (NPR) will go-ahead.

Speaking at the Conservative Party conference he described our national infrastructure as “way behind some of our key competitors”.

He said: “Transport is one of the supreme leveller-uppers, and we are making the big generational changes shirked by previous governments, we will do Northern Powerhouse Rail, we will link up the cities of the midlands and the north.”
