September's cover feature is the Rail Minister Chris Heaton-Harris, who has discussed the 62 commitments of the Williams-Shapps Plan for Rail.

Rail Director's Danny Longhorn said: "There is always a great sense of excitement when the latest magazine starts to land and I can't wait to see the reaction to our latest edition.

"I would like to thank everyone who has contributed to the latest edition. It is a real privilege to have spoken to so many amazing individuals whose expertise and passion make the UK rail industry the wonderful success it is."

Readers of the magazine will also be able to take in our interview with Transport Commissioner for London Andy Byford, who talks about the Triple Crown challenge for the Crossrail project.

In addition, there are interviews with the Railway Mission's former chair of trustees Keith Rose, Jay Shen from Transreport and special features with details of next week's combined Railtex and Infrarail event in Birmingham.

Chris Wiles, who leads the RBD Publications advertising sales team, said: "There continues to be a huge amount of interest in appearing in Rail Director magazine, so I can't thank all the organisations enough for putting their trust in us to showcase their products and services.

"It is a real honour to be representing so many companies and to hear the stories of how successful appearing in Rail Director has proved for their business.

"Work is well underway for October's magazine, with advertising space filling up very quickly. I would urge anyone wanting to feature to contact us as soon as possible."
